A New Day in Labor Relations: Federal Management in the Wake of President Obama's Executive Order

Who Should Attend?

April 28, 2010 • 12 – 1:30 p.m. ET

William Wiley, Attorney, Speaker and Director, Federal Employment Law Training Group

- ▶ Labor Relations Practitioners
- ▶ Employee Relations Professionals
- ▶ Human Resources Professionals
- ▶ Managers & Supervisors
- ▶ Agency Employment Law Attorneys
- ▶ Arbitrators
- ▶ Agency Policy Makers
- ▶ Union Officials & Representatives

Effective December 9, 2009, President Obama's Executive Order 13522 was the most significant change to federal sector labor relations in more than a decade, expanding the obligation of federal supervisors to deal with employee unions proactively — and adding to the existing confusion over what is legally required.

Join federal employment law expert William Wiley to get clarification on it all. Through a brief review of earlier presidential directives concerning labor relations and a thorough examination of the new regulations, you'll understand the legal requirements relative to federal sector negotiability and how the Order changes federal labor relations practices.

In just 90 minutes, you'll get an expert explanation of how the new Order affects you, plus specific guidance on how to:

- ▶ Develop a strategy for implementing the EO in your agency
- ▶ Measure employee and management satisfaction with the labor relations program
- ▶ Understand the role of the National Council on Federal Labor-Management Relations
- ▶ Meet the strict deadlines set by the EO
- ▶ And more!

And with pending legislation before Congress that would make it easier for unions to form, even organizations without a union presence should prepare for the increased possibility of having one soon. Don't miss your chance to learn your potential role in the new federal labor relations environment.
